FALL 2003

Columbia begins its 176th year

AS THE 176th academic year of Columbia Seminary officially began, President Laura Mendenhall welcomed and introduced new friends and members of the Columbia community, reminding everyone of their roles within a greater "cloud of witnesses." Among the special guests at Columbia's September 10 opening convocation, held at Columbia Presbyterian Church, of particular note was Agnes Gere '57, the first woman to graduate from the three-year divinity program at Columbia.

In his convocation sermon, "Fear of the Lord," based on Matthew 7:14-23, the Rev. Dr. P. C. "Buddy" Enniss '58 recalled the words of Karl Barth to charge colleagues and students to embrace the task of making "'God' a cheerful word again." In a world that is either fearful of God's wrath or cynical of God's grace, Enniss affirmed that God is not out to get us, but to save us. "With every word we speak," he added, again calling on Barth, "our task is to give the world a different experience of God...to the end that all God's people may experience the joy for which they were created."

Following convocation at a luncheon and awards celebration, Ernestine Cole, acting dean of students, recognized recipients of the Columbia, Honor, and Merit Scholarships. The Indiantown Country Church Award was presented to Susan Smith for outstanding ministry in a rural church this summer, and Suzy Edwards won the Julia Abdullah Award for her paper on enhancing the church-school hour. □

The Rev. P. C. "Buddy" Enniss, convocation preacher, President Laura S. Mendenhall, and President Emeritus J. Davison Philips gather after opening convocation.

At the community luncheon following convocation, awards were presented to Alexander Oliver (left) and Dan Stephens '04. Oliver, a retired member of the maintenance staff, received the Betsey Burgess Staff Award for faithfulness, dedicated service, and Christian character upholding the seminary's purpose and mission. Stephens received the Miss C. Virginia Harrison Award, presented to a senior who is conscientious, responsible, hard working, and who will make a great contribution to the Presbyterian Church (USA).

Columbia welcomes largest incoming M.Div. class in 11 years

COLUMBIA SEMINARY WELCOMED 64 new students to the Master of Divinity (M.Div.) program this fall, tying 1992 for the largest incoming M.Div. class. Twenty-seven of those students graduated from church-related colleges, with 15 coming from Presbyterian schools, including seven from Presbyterian College in Clinton, SC.

Ann Clay Adams, director of admissions, says, "I believe that we are beginning to see results from new initiatives designed to lift up leaders for church service. This year we welcomed several students referred to us by President Emeritus Doug Oldenburg's program, Advocates for Ministry. A couple of students came to us through congregational match programs, such as the Fund for Theological Education's new recruitment program, and from a Church and Vocations-related congregation in Charlotte. In the future we expect to reap the benefits of the new PLSE program which was the brainchild of CTS trustee John Aldridge. And all of these initiatives have proven helpful already in raising the level of awareness in congregations that they need to identify gifted young people and encourage them to consider ministry. This is indeed a valuable service, not only to seminaries, but to the whole church."

Among the M.Div. class's occupational backgrounds are PC(USA) denominational staff, military, welding, stage design, law, and business. One student has been a GAP store manager. Another, Adams said, has "sold drugs" as a pharmaceutical company sales representative.

Fifteen states, Puerto Rico and Korea, and seven denominations are represented in the class. □

Investing in God's handiwork

Laura S. Mendenhall, President

GOD CONTINUES TO be at work at 701 Columbia Drive, Decatur, Georgia. In case things look slow where you are, it may be that the winds of the Spirit are hovering over Columbia Theological Seminary right now.

Classes have resumed; ordination exams have been taken; students are using new skills to explore Scripture and theology and the practical skills of ministry. Faculty are back and eager, teaching a new class of 64 Master of Divinity students. That number ties with 1992 as the largest in recorded history (at least since 1983, when our Admissions Office began tracking this information). Ninety-one percent of the entering class is from the Presbyterian Church (USA), that being ten more Presbyterian students in an entering class than in any of the recent years.

Almost weekly we get reports from members of May's graduating class that another has received a call and is stepping into a pastoral role in some waiting Presbyterian congregation. Graduation records from other Presbyterian seminaries indicate that we are putting more pastors and associate pastors into the Presbyterian Church (USA) congregations than any of the other seminaries. We are doing what we do best—preparing and nurturing pastors and leaders for the Presbyterian Church. This is clearly our strength. And the church continues to count on us for pastoral leadership.

We are pleased that the church is stepping up to the responsibility to partner with the Holy Spirit to call those with gifts for leadership into Christ's ministry. Calvin understood that both the inward testimony of the Holy Spirit and the affirmation of God's people are essential to discerning God's call to us. Sometimes it takes a voice from the outside to call out attention to an inner voice. Sometimes it takes a voice from the outside to encourage us to trust an inner voice. We are grateful for the work of these partners:

- Presbyterian Leadership Search Effort (PLSE), a church-wide effort encouraging congregations to identify those among their own flock who have gifts for ministry and sending their names to a central computer base that seminaries and campus ministries might be able to encourage and invite young people to consider whether God might be calling them into full-time Christian ministry
- Advocates in Ministry, teams of seasoned and young pastors who visit with college students about the joy of pastoral ministry
- Vocation in Ministry, groups who offer a trial year at seminary to qualified college students who have not considered the ministry as a vocation

- Fund for Theological Education's Congregational Recruitment program, congregations who partner with the seminary to support one of their student's expenses while attending seminary.

I continue to believe that you and I are investing ourselves in God's handiwork at Columbia Theological Seminary. We are blessed to be participants in the new thing God is doing in a place where Christ's ministry has a well-worn path. □

Maggi Henderson

Henderson named dean of students, vice president of student services

IN AUGUST, COLUMBIA announced the appointment of the Rev. Margret (Maggi) Henderson as dean of students and vice president of student services. She comes to Columbia from Highland Presbyterian Church in Winston-Salem, North Carolina, where she served as associate pastor.

Ordained as a Minister of the Word and Sacrament in the Presbyterian Church (USA) in 1988, Henderson holds the B.S. in psychology from the University of Oregon, the M.Div. from Union Theological Seminary in Virginia, and the M.A. in Christian education from the Presbyterian School of Christian Education. Prior to her most recent call, she served as associate pastor of Hope Presbyterian Church in Austin, Texas, and as Presbyterian campus minister to Salem College.

Throughout her ministry, Henderson has been involved in the PC(USA) at the presbytery and national levels. As member and chair of Salem Presbytery's Committee on Preparation for Ministry since 1993, Henderson has assisted many seminary students through the call process and into their first churches. She has also been active in youth ministry at the national level, having been a design team member and chaplain for the Presbyterian Youth Triennium. In 2002, she co-directed two Montreat Youth Conferences for more than 2,500 young people.

Speaking of Henderson's appointment, Columbia's President Laura Mendenhall says, "Maggi brings a real commitment to the church and a deep respect for those who serve Christ. Her wisdom and insight, her listening and guiding, her wit and humor will be gifts to the entire seminary community and those we serve. We are grateful that God has called Maggi Henderson to this ministry and look forward to her leadership." □

Harvey Newman

Newman named director of Faith and the City Program

HARVEY K. NEWMAN has been named the new director of Columbia Seminary's Faith and the City program. Faith and the City is a cooperative effort of Columbia, Candler School of Theology, and the Interdenominational Theological Center. The program seeks to foster the development of public religious leadership in clergy and clergy-information.

As director of Faith and the City, Newman will also teach several Master of Divinity and Doctor of Ministry courses at Columbia. His personal experience as an ordained minister in the United Church of Christ (UCC) and former pastor of First UCC Church in Liberty, North Carolina, gives him a unique and valuable perspective for working with pastors and future pastors. He holds the M.Div. from Duke University Divinity School and the Ph.D. from Emory University.

Newman, who previously taught at Columbia as an adjunct professor, returns to the seminary while remaining professor of urban policy studies at Georgia State University (GSU), where he has served since 1970. He has also served at GSU as acting associate director of the school of public administration and urban studies in the College of Public and Urban Affairs, as well as coordinator of urban studies in the College of Urban Life.

Speaking of his appointment, President Laura Mendenhall says, "Harvey is immediately helpful because he already understands Columbia and the Faith and the City program. This joint appointment promises to bring new levels of expertise to the Faith and the City work from someone exceedingly knowledgeable about the urban setting. We are pleased to offer Harvey Newman as a gift to our students, to our Faith and the City colleagues at the Interdenominational Theological Center and Candler School of Theology, and to the city of Atlanta." □

These pastors are among 40 who convened at Columbia in August for the inaugural S<sup>3</sup> workshop, funded by the Lilly Endowment.

S<sup>3</sup> program is SSSomething new in continuing education

FORTY-NINE PASTORS FROM 10 states and seven denominations formed the eight groups selected for the inaugural S<sup>3</sup> Orientation Workshop held at Columbia Seminary August 11-14. Funded by the Lilly Foundation, the S<sup>3</sup> Project, whose name points toward its focus on aspects of Sabbath, study, and service of church pastors, involves self-directed peer learning groups in two-year intentional learning projects.

Project proposals for 2003 included Celtic spirituality; technology in ministry; post-modern/post-Christendom ministry; and what it means to be Protestant in a non-Protestant context. Applications will be received in the spring for participation in the 2004 cohort. To apply, contact the Office of Continuing Education at 404-687-4562, or email ConEd@CTSnet.edu. □

Lifelong Learning programs invite your participation

BEYOND COLUMBIA SEMINARY'S degree programs are abundant opportunities for lifelong learning. Through Continuing Education, for example, 50 pastors are embarking on a new venture called the S<sup>3</sup> Project, where they'll work together in small, self-directed peer learning groups.

Through the Lay Institute, anyone can learn from the likes of Shirley Guthrie, Kathleen O'Connor, Michael Morgan, and Beth Johnson—or look together at books and movies through a theological lens.

A success of New Church Development is the recent graduation of Portuguese-speaking commissioned lay pastors. Two graduates are already pastors in new congregations.

The Spirituality Program offers trips to its participants—to Rome and Geneva, for example—to learn about Christianity's spiritual heritage right at the source.

In addition to this issue of Vantage, look for more Lifelong Learning programs on Columbia's web site at www.CTSnet.edu. □

Holmes presents Smyth lectures

BARBARA HOLMES, ASSOCIATE professor of ethics and African-American religious studies at Memphis Theological Seminary, presented the 2003 Smyth Lectures at Columbia Theological Seminary in mid-October. The topic of her lecture series was "Cosmology and Culture."

An ordained Pentecostal minister in the United Church of Christ, Holmes practiced law for eight years before receiving the M.Div. from Columbia Seminary in 1995 and the Ph.D. from Vanderbilt University in 1998. Her interests include ethics, African-American religious studies, science and religion, and social theory. Holmes's latest book, Race and the Cosmos: An Invitation to View the World Differently, is a metaphysical study of cosmology, race, and what it means to awaken to full liberation. □

Spirituality program explores Europe

"THERE IS AN extraordinary quality about studying a person, not only in his or her historical context, but also in geographical context," says Julie Johnson (D.Min. '98), director of the Spirituality Program at Columbia Seminary. Since 2000, Johnson has been taking students in the Certificate in Spiritual Formation program right to the source to study important people and places in the history of Christian spirituality.

Last year students traveled to Spain to study the writing of St. Teresa of Avila. While in Avila, they read Teresa's The Interior Castle. According to Johnson, students were able to walk through the city with a transformed awareness of Teresa's work.

This year participants studied the life, ministry, and spiritual practices of John Calvin in Geneva, Switzerland. Dr. Tom Schwanda, director of the Reformed Spirituality Network, led the trip October 14-21, 2004. Lodging was at the Senecal retreat house in the center of Geneva.

Participants also studied at the World Council of Churches headquarters in Geneva. Dr. Odair Pedrosa Meteus, secretary of the World Association of Reformed Churches, lectured on the Council's renewed emphasis on spiritual formation. □

Nurturing Faith at the Edge January 26-29 Seminars

"NURTRING FAITH AT the Edge: Preaching, Teaching and Communicating in a Changing Culture" is the theme of the 2004 January Seminars, January 26-29.

In a world where religious identity matters more than anyone predicted a decade ago, many are heading to the center of their faith traditions to shore up the foundations. Meanwhile, others are leaving the fold to explore faith beyond their own conventions. Ministry is increasingly "edgy," carried out in the shifting borders between the church and the world.

Tom Long, Bandy Professor of Preaching at Candler School of Theology at Emory University, John Westerhoff, theologian in residence at St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Atlanta, and seminary faculty members Anna Carter Florence, Barbara Brown Taylor, and Dent Davis will lead daily worship and seminars. Topics include lectionary preaching (Lent to Pentecost), ministry on the border between the church and the world, and prayer as appreciative inquiry.

Make plans now to attend. Cost is $240. Because of the nature of this event, single-day registration is not possible. For more information, call 404 687-4562, email ConEd@CTSnet.edu, or visit www.CTSnet.edu. □

'Worship and the Contemporary Church' Colloquium: April 12-14

WORSHIP IS CHANGING in the twenty-first century. Pastors and churches are struggling to develop new forms of worship and adapt traditional practices to meet the needs of changing congregations. Colloquium 2004 will be held April 12-14, and will explore traditional, contemporary, and blended understandings and practices of congregational worship. Participants will have an opportunity to experience diverse forms of worship, learn how they have been used in a variety of church situations, and explore questions related to music, media, preaching, and liturgy.

This year's keynote speaker is Dr. Timothy L. Carson. Carson is pastor of Webster Groves Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) in St. Louis, Missouri. A nationally known resource person in contemporary worship, Carson is author of So You're Thinking About Contemporary Worship (Chalice Press, 1997) and Liminal Reality and Transformational Power (University Press, 1997). An accomplished musician, he also has produced two music CDs, Wind of the Spirit (1997) and Wind of the Spirit 2 (2001).

Alumni/ae and friends are encouraged to mark these dates on their calendars. More information will be available in the winter Vantage, or call 404 687-4566, email ConEd@CTSnet.edu, or visit www.CTSnet.edu. □

Juliette "Jet" Harper

Jet Harper retires from Columbia

AT THE END of September, the Columbia Seminary family gathered at a farewell reception to honor our friend and colleague, Juliette "Jet" Harper, who retired as director of publications and publicity, a post she had held since 1985.

For those of you off campus—Columbia's alumni/ae and friends around the world—it is Jet who has worked with such dedication for so long to make sure that you are connected to life on campus and the news of Columbia. You know her work if you read Vantage, if you've paged through any Columbia Seminary brochure, pored through the annual report or academic catalogue, visited the Web site, noticed a Columbia advertisement in a magazine, or read about the seminary in a newspaper.

Here on campus, we will miss Jet's peerless professionalism and dedication to quality—she has a gift for clean copy, clean design, and crisp, clear thinking. We will miss the way she "decorated" her office, which almost required the clean-up crew from the Exxon Valdez oil spill. We will miss Jet's musings about her hometown of Oak Hill, Alabama, and its leading industry, the U.S. Postal Service. We will miss her wry sense of humor and the nicknames she bestowed on so many of us.

Robert Greenleaf described the source of servant leadership as the "natural feeling that one wants to serve, to serve first," that is, to be motivated not by money or recognition but by a desire to work toward a higher purpose. No individual whose name adorns a building or portrait adorns a wall embodies that virtue more than Jet, who served for the most part without similar notice or commendation. She has been a consummate servant leader at Columbia. We thank God for her ministry among us. She will always be our friend. □

O'Connor recipient of book award

KATHLEEN M. O'CONNOR, PROFESSOR of Old Testament, has received the Catholic Press Association's top award in the category of scripture for her Lamentations and the Tears of the World. In reviewing the book, the Catholic Press Association notes O'Connor's ability to blend "scholarship, practical insight, and deep spirituality—a rare combination—to bring to life an often forgotten and misunderstood biblical book."

In Lamentations and the Tears of the World, O'Connor writes for the academic community but also for pastors and educated laypersons. She believes that the poems of Lamentations provide an important connection between worship and the expression of pain and suffering, both personal and societal. "Lamentations" she says, "invites people to break the culture of denial, to honor our own pain, however small or great, and to be open to compassion for others' suffering. We are able to treat others with full dignity and reverence only when we can treat ourselves with the same Christian regard."

The book has two major sections, the first presenting a thorough exegetical analysis of Lamentations' five poems and the second offering her reflections on what she terms a "theology of witness." In this latter section O'Connor engages in an interpretation of Lamentations, which professor emeritus Walter Brueggemann describes as "a rich and shamelessly beautiful theological exposition." O'Connor finds in Lamentation's stark poetry an important theological resource for individuals and the worshipping community. One reviewer writes, "O'Connor speaks from a wounded heart that looks out on a wounded world—both still waiting, paradoxically, for the God who heals all wounds."

O'Connor's work, deeply informed by her own life, also draws on her experience teaching at Columbia and lecturing at churches and conferences throughout the country. "Discussions with the pastors in my Doctor of Ministry courses have been particularly important in shaping my understanding of how this text comes to be lived in worshipping communities and how it can be a theological resource for pastors," she says. "Lamentations invites us to bring into worship all that is wounded, both in ourselves and in our world. This worshipful expression of suffering transforms an otherwise bleak book into an important step on the road to healing."

In addition to its significance for worshipping communities and individual believers, the Catholic Press Association Award recognizes Lamentations and the Tears of the World for its scholarly excellence and fresh academic insight. As Walter Brueggemann says, "This award acknowledges the book's importance in the field and affirms O'Connor's contribution to new interpretive currents in Old Testament studies." The award commends O'Connor's work and also reflects the commitment to academic excellence relevant to the needs of the church that is characteristic of Columbia's faculty as a whole. □

Noble's book a story of justice

IN HIS NEW BOOK, Beyond the Burning Bus: The Civil Rights Revolution in a Southern Town, Anniston, Alabama, 1956-1965, J. Phillips (Phil) Noble '45, recounts events of his time as pastor of First Presbyterian Church in Anniston. As chair of the first biracial council on human relations in Alabama, and perhaps in the South, Noble worked with a small group of men, black and white, to guide Anniston through integration with relative harmony and dignity. The book recalls hard-fought victories and is a reminder of the work of racial reconciliation that yet remains.

Noble accepted a call to pastor the Anniston church in 1956, having already served churches in Georgia and South Carolina. As the Civil Rights movement began, Anniston experienced racial discord, like much of the South. It is perhaps most widely remembered for the 1961 mob attack on the Freedom Riders that occurred there, during which the Riders were beaten and one of their buses set on fire.

Following that incident, a group of ministers, including Noble, formed a biracial alliance to work for the peaceful integration of the city. By 1963, the efforts of this group led to the formation of the Human Relations Council, which Noble chaired, and which President Kennedy commended as a great step forward in race relations. Hundreds of communities across the South contacted Noble and the council for advice on peaceful integration.

After leaving Anniston in 1971, Noble continued in the ministry of the Presbyterian Church (USA) as both pastor and administrator until his retirement in 1989. He served two terms as a trustee of Columbia Theological Seminary and chaired Columbia's board from 1978-1983. In 1991, Columbia presented Noble with the Distinguished Service Award in recognition of his special contribution to Christ's call for justice in the world and love for all humankind.

Beyond the Burning Bus was released in September to coincide with a symposium in Anniston commemorating the 40th anniversary of a mob attack on two black ministers at the Anniston public library. All proceeds from the sale of the book will be donated to defray the cost of the symposium. Any residual funds will be designated for a biracial scholarship fund for young people in Calhoun County, Alabama. □

Harrington Prize winner preaches at Columbia

YOHAN KIM, PASTOR of SAVE Ministries, the English-speaking congregation at Korean Community Presbyterian Church in Duluth, Georgia, preached at Columbia Seminary on October 16.

Kim is the recipient of the Harrington Prize. The award is a collaborative effort of Presbyterian College, Columbia Seminary, and Peachtree Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, and recognizes individuals in the early stages of their careers in Christian ministry who have demonstrated exemplary preaching, evangelism, community service, and the promise for future contributions to Christian ministry. In addition to serving as a distinguished visitor and lecturer at the three institutions, Kim will receive a $25,000 cash stipend.

A native of Seoul, South Korea, Kim says he "fought tooth and nail" any thoughts of entering the ministry, planning instead to teach theology. However, with his wife pregnant and no job prospects, he accepted a position in 1995 as college pastor at Torrance, California's First Presbyterian Church, a Korean-speaking ministry located in the Los Angeles suburbs. He says, "I fell in love with ministry through those kids."

Five years later, Kim moved to the Korean Community Presbyterian Church of Atlanta's campus in Tucker. The congregation now has a new 12-acre site in Duluth, the largest Korean-American church in the southeastern United States. "I've lost track of the number of people in our English-speaking congregation," Kim says, noting that it is now a multicultural congregation.

The Harrington Prize honors the life and ministry of the late W. Frank Harrington, former senior minister at Peachtree Presbyterian Church. Harrington held degrees from Presbyterian College and Columbia Seminary. He also served on the seminary's Board of Trustees. □

Campbell named adjunct professor

COLUMBIA HAS NAMED William (Bill) Campbell adjunct professor of New Testament for the 2003-04 academic year. Campbell holds the Ph.D. in New Testament from Princeton Theological Seminary and the M.A. in theology and scripture from St. Michael's College. Most recently, he taught at Boston College as adjunct assistant professor of New Testament.

Among Campbell's academic interests are the Acts of the Apostles, the Synoptic Gospels (especially the Gospel of Mark), and the letters of Paul. At Columbia, he will teach exegesis and survey courses in New Testament as well as classes on Timothy, Titus, and Acts.

A member of the Society of Biblical Literature (SBL), Campbell received the SBL Mid-Atlantic Region's Howard Clark Kee Award in 1998 for "Mark 15:21-41: The Death Scene in Mark's 'Screenplay.'" His current book project is titled Who Are We in Acts? Reimagining First-Person Narratives in the Acts of the Apostles. □
